

Residents Get Dirty For Archeology Project

Carole McCarthy holds up a piece of pipe she discovered while sifting through soil in her test area.

Gary Paul and his daughters Sidney and Jordan get a hands-on lesson in archeology, carefully digging through layers of soil with a trowel while checking for Pilgrim or Native American artifacts.

Jessica Smith and daughters Vicky and Abby sort through dirt taken from a "test trench" at the Second Meetinghouse site.

Carole McCarthy, Carola vonKappff and Sarah Rogerson dig a wider trench after finding some artifacts in their initial test pit.

Dorbury report
Wednesday Oct 15, 2008

pg 20

Joanne LeVesque digs out debris from a test trench near the rear of the site.

Photos by Justin Graeber

Kris Gaskins tests the depth of an excavation area. Most of the artifacts found at the site were within a certain soil depth.

Eric Strom employs a less-than-delicate tool to excavate this part of the trench.

Mattie Ali looks for Pilgrim or Native American artifacts as she sifts through dirt using a screener.